Sun Nov 23/25 Updates in Dermatology - Day 1 of 2 (ZOOM) Sun, Nov 23, 2025  Agenda: Online live via. Zoom only (no in-person option but will be recorded)  Link to flyer  Day 1 of 2 (Nov 23/25): Cutaneous and otic infection diagnosis and management in veterinary dermatology. Cutaneous and otic infections in our dermatology patients can be frustrating to manage. Cytology is a quick, inexpensive and non-invasive diagnostic test to determine whether patients have secondary infections. Knowing how to take samples and being confident interpreting these samples is critical to an animal's disease management and health. For these reasons, cytology should be part of the minimum database for any patient being seen for a "skin or ear problem". Antimicrobial resistance continues to be of growing concern in both veterinary and human medicine. During this session we will review the newly published guidelines for the treatment for bacterial pyoderma (both susceptible and resistant) as well as how to diagnose resistant infections. We will also discuss treatment of infectious otitis externa as well as reviewing all the factors contributing to otitis development and ways to better manage those difficult otitis cases in the clinic. Day 2 of 2 (Nov 30/25): To itch or not to itch? Managing allergic dermatitis. Companion animals with allergic skin disease make up a large portion of your patients in general practice. With the chronic nature of this disease process, there are many ups and downs leading clients to become frustrated. During this session we will review the different types of allergies, pathophysiology, clinical signs as well as the diagnostic work-up.
